Happy summer! Even though “they” say the days are getting shorter, I am still enjoying every minute of daylight during these summer days! Last week while I was in NYC, I watched “Yoga in the Square” on the day of the solstice. Hundreds of people in the middle of Times Square taking a yoga class and reveling in the longest day of the year! Amid the noise of Times Square, I found it fascinating as I watched men and women of all ages tune out the chaos and simply stretch and move, trying to be present and attentive to they ways their body moved. I was reminded of a magnet on our kitchen door: Peace. It does not mean to be in a place where there is no noise, trouble or hard work. It means to be in the midst of those things and still be calm in your heart. (unknown)

Peace. Finding peace. Living peace. Sharing peace. Sounds easy, but as we all know, quite possibly one of the hardest things we do daily. Our world at times seems like a very troubled place and yet, each day you and I have the opportunity to find goodness and compassion in our midst. Keep looking for the good in our encounters. Continue to be a beacon of hope and light, even when things seem dark. Take some time each day to find peace in the midst of chaos, noise and misunderstanding. Peace. It does not mean to be in a place where there is no noise, trouble or hard work. It means to be in the midst of those things and still be calm in your heart.

As I enter into these final days at Newman @ RIT, know that each of you are in my thoughts and prayers. My time here has been rich. I have learned much and received much through your great care and compassion for our students and each other. Please continue to offer the new associate director the same generosity and care you offered me.

Peace and good,
Alice
